Daily Mercury

MENU

Sport

Lifestyle

Community

What's On

lobs

Motoring

Real Estate

Obituaries

Classifieds

'Gay panic' defence to be removed after Maryborough priest's nine-year campaign

Geoff Egan | 30th Nov 2016 1:23 PM

'Liars': Once heroic cop in trouble after

Giant rats eat three-month-baby alive as

ADVERTISEMENT

Wayne Ruks was violently killed in a Maryborough churchyard in 2008.

Contributed

JUST IN

hose' 2 hours ago

on top of his game

of highway

NINE years after Jason Andrew Pearce used the "gay panic" defence after he bashed another man to Webeh supplyang book go blocken well and the read of the part of being changed. algae outbreak 27 minutes ago

An unwanted sexual advance is currently a partial defence for murder under Queensland laws.

In 2010 Pearce was charged with the 2008 murder of Wayne Robert Ruks. But he used the gay panic 如何可以 was charged with the 2008 murder of Ruk's manslaughter. He was sentenced to nine years jail but released on parole in July 2012.

His co-offender Richard John Meerdink was jailed for 10 years and was not eligible for parole until thiর প্রবাধ parties an hour ago

Queensland Attorney-General Yvette D'Ath on Wednesday announced she would introduce legislation to remove the defence with the garden

But the legislation will not be debated or voted on until next year.

"This is another important step to send an important message - that the criminal code does not condoppe ওচ্চ চুম্বার ক্রিন্দ্র কর্মান বার্ক করিছিল। community," she said.

When Mr Ruks was killed in a churchyard, priest Father Paul Kelly was one of the first people on the scene. He has campaigned for the laws to be SHOCKING: Video shows ute in wrong lane changed since Pearce's conviction was reduced to manslaughter.

He started a petition that has been signed by nearly 290,000.

Fr Kelly welcomed the changes as the end of a long campaign.

"It's been a long struggle but it's been worth it," he said.

Ms D'Ath said the changes would remove the partial defence the laws currently provided for unwanted sexual advances - except for "a personal of exceptional character".

"Now what does that circumstance mean? That is for the courts to decide," she said.

Shadow Attorney-General Ian Walker said the LNP would wait to see the legislation before deciding how to vote but supported the move.

"In principal we don't think it has a place in our laws today," he said.

"The Opposition came out quite some time ago in support of the gay panic defence being changed. It's been quite some time coming."

The legislation will also increase the penalty from two years jail to five years jail for people who interfere with a corpse.

ARM NEWSDESK

© The Mackay Printing and Publishing Company Pty Ltd 2016. Unauthorised reproduction is prohibited under the laws of Australia and by international treaty.